Dublin

My name is Marcia. My parents come from Nigeria, but I was born in Dublin. Dublin is the capital of the Republic of Ireland. About 1.5 million people live in or around the city. In 2007, Dublin was voted the friendliest city in Europe.

If you like shopping, this is the place for you. I think the coolest clothes shops and music shops are in Temple Bar and around George's Street. In the evening, there's a lot to do. I often go to hip-hop, pop, and rock concerts.

At the weekends I like visiting art galleries like the Museum of Modern Art. Ireland is famous for its writers. In Dublin you can find statues of writers like James Joyce and Oscar Wilde.

There are many ways to explore Dublin. Walk along the river Liffey and you can see famous bridges, like the Halfpenny Bridge. You can also get around by bicycle. But I think the DART train and the LUAS tram are more comfortable. They are also faster than the bus. Finally, if you like sport, check out the Phoenix Park. It's near the city centre and it's the perfect place to skateboard or go out on your rollerblades.

Aboriginal Australia

Before 1788 only Aboriginal people lived in Australia. They spoke many different languages and there was a strong tradition of telling stories. These stories taught children many things about the land. Today, a lot of aboriginal teenagers learn about their history and culture through these stories. One of the most important stories is The Rainbow Serpent or Rainbow Snake.

The Rainbow Serpent is an enormous snake. It appears to people as a rainbow, or moves through water and rain. The serpent is sometimes creative. It gives names to places and it sings about these places. The snake also gives things to people. It can help sick people and make others stronger. But the Rainbow Serpent can be dangerous too. So if you see it in Australia, be careful!

The British anthropologist Professor Alfred Radcliffe-Brown saw that many Aboriginal groups across Australia told similar stories about a snake. Each group had a different name for this snake. In 1926, Radcliffe-Brown first used the term Rainbow Serpent, to talk about the snake in these stories. Today the Rainbow Serpent myth is well-known. It is used as an excellent example of Australian Aboriginal mythology.
